ARC LIGHT NEEDED

AT DANGEROUS TRAFFIC SPOT NEAR BRIDGE ENTRANCE

Let's have lights and more lights! There are many dark spots in the residential and business sections that need better illumination, but nowhere is the need more urgent than at the intersection where West Point Loma boulevard and Abbott street traffic joins at the entrance to Mission Bay bridge. An arc light placed there may prevent a terrible auto tragedy some dark night.

Smalley, general manager of the California Pacific Car tours, escorted a special party to Ocean Beach and Mission Beach last Wednesday afternoon and evening, calling at "The Beach News" office to renew personal friendships with the staff and to introduce his guests. The ever-popular and popular Fay was accompanied by Miss Evelyn Woolly, of Minneapolis, representing the Minnesota Railroad Commission; Mrs. Faye Richey, representing the Clift Hotel, San Francisco and the El Mirador Hotel, of Santa Barbara; and Mr. Jacques Mueller, of Lausanne, Switzerland, representing the Swiss National Railway. The visitors were made thrice welcome and declared themselves highly entertained over the delights of the beach districts of San Diego. Mr. Smalley, who now has his headquarters in San Francisco and Los Angeles, is most pleasantly remembered as the former enterprising traffic manager of the S. D. WONDERFUL VIEW FROM POINT LOMA HIGH SCHOOL

To really see San Diego, one may stand on the grounds of Point Loma High School and see much that can not be seen close at hand. From the front of the school the Pacific Ocean and Mission Bay, and between them can be seen the Mission Beach strand. Beyond these are the hills in the distance. From the eastern side of the school can be seen the far-off mountains. To the south one can see the San Diego bay, which branches into many arms and disappears out of sight. In the middle of the bay lies North Island and beyond this is Coronado and still farther away are the mountains of Mexico. On the east of the bay San Diego rises up the slope and disappears from sight down the other side of the hill. The Naval Training Station and Marine Base are so close that the men can be seen at their work. San Diego, seen in such a way, can be more beautiful than one can imagine when he is down in the heart of the city.

POINT LOMA ART CLASSES

To develop a sense of beauty, an interest in order, and the habit of using the imagination is the general aim of the Art courses at Point Loma Junior-Senior High School. Design, being fundamental and underlying all types of art work, is given serious study and considerable time.

THE STUDENT BODY

Now that the first semester has gotten under way and the rush and hurry of the first few weeks is over, the student body will soon begin functioning. There are one or two things which have hung over from last semester, yet to be decided, namely, the election of a treasurer, and the choosing of a member of the 42-A class for the legislature. There is also the question which was discussed last year: "Does Point Loma want a merit system?"

"GET ACQUAINTED PARTY"

The "Tes. Trans." "Get Acquainted Party," held recently turned out to be very successful. Miss Walker's girls furnished a peppy little act, entitled "The Improvement on the Volga Boatman." One of the features of the afternoon was the "Broom Dance," the aim of which was to get the new girls acquainted with the former members of the club.

The Girl's Athletic Club has met and elected officers. The white slip-over sweater is the official sweater and other girls are asked to please remember this. Physical examinations will be completed next week. Postures, feet, height and weight are the principal things to be considered. Corrective classes will start the following week. The spirit of the girls has been exceptionally fine and it is appreciated a great deal by the instructor, Miss Eugenia Welker.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

DOG PROTECTS BODY OF ITS DEAD MASTER

Yuba City, (Sutter Co.)—A dog's invariable faithfulness to his master was given added proof a short time ago when Deputy Coroner Hugh Price Jones was called to the Bogue section to take charge of the remains of Charles A. Bonham, bachelor farmer who had died unattended during the night. On approaching the cabin of the dead man, Jones was driven back several times by Bonham's dog, the animal gnashing his teeth and growing more defiant at each attempt on the part of Jones to reach the door. Finally a neighbor of Bonham was able to appease the dog sufficiently to permit entrance, but the dog went toward the bed snarling and took a defiant position over his master's body, which he retained until again appeased. Bonham's affection for the dog stood in the way of his seeking medical attention in San Francisco. He told a neighbor a week ago that before he could make a trip to San Francisco to visit a specialist he would have to kill the dog, as he was convinced the animal would not stay with any other human, being.

A mining scene duplicating the old gold days of the San Andreas section can be witnessed these days on the pioneer Demerest property, seven miles east of San Andreas where John C. Benson has a crew at work washing rich gravel at the junction of Cherokee and San Domingo creeks. The early-day miners found this ground rich, but were unable to attain depth at this particular point owing to the flow of water underground. Benson is handling the water with a gasoline-driven pump and is washing gravel daily in sluice boxes. As much as $2.50 to the pan is being recovered, it is said.

Mittelsteadt hopes to establish a small yearly allowance to enlisted men and seeks to have the strength of the national guard increased from 5,300 to 6,300 by 1928.

California may have a great sculptor of the future in Helen Turner, 16-year-old high school girl of San Andreas, Calaveras county, according to art experts who are enthusiastic over examples of the girl's work on exhibit in Sacramento. Miss Turner's clay group "Gold Diggers of Calaveras," won high honors at the state fair art display and, despite the fact she has never been given instruction in modeling, three of her other sculptures aroused such interest that they were taken to San Francisco to be cast in bronze.

The possibility of submitting a bond issue proposition to the voters in the near future to pay off indebtedness upon two of the city fire trucks of Dunsmuir and to provide the city with a fire alarm system, is being considered by the board of trustees. It is probable that three separate propositions will be submitted. One would be a proposal to issue bonds for $125,000 to pay off indebtedness on the two fire engines, another would be $7,000 for the purchase of a fire alarm system and another $7,000 for a service truck.

The old San Luis Obispo Mission, built in 1772, was broken into by vandals, who looted the altar and tabernacle, taking several valuable articles of faith, and maliciously destroying a part of the old altar. A jeweled gold chalice, a gift to Father Daniel Keenan, the pastor of the mission, at his ordination, the altar cross, a brass incense bowl and silver place for the censor were taken. Father Keenan stated the chalice was worth approximately $500, but would have no particular commercial value.

B. F. List, mayor of Exeter and a prominent fruit grower and shipper of that Tulare county city, told the Hanford Kiwanis club about it in an address.

Certain Magic Found in Ownership of Home

There is a magic in the ownership of property, especially when that property consists of a home. A man will lay down his life without question or thought when the integrity of his home is at stake. On the other hand, if the same amount of money were placed in stocks or bonds, or even a factory, it is extremely problematical whether he would even risk his life if they were threatened with destruction. The magic lies in the fact that a home stands for more than mere intrinsic value; it represents more than mere dollars.

It carries around it all the background of the family life and the search of that family for better living. It may have the scars of the struggle written all over its walls, but it is near and dear in spite of it. Little do we dream the real magic we are conjuring up for those dependent upon us when we gird up our belts, reach for the pen and ink and sign the pledge on the contract that commits us and our savings to a program of home-ownership. It is the most important thing a man and woman can do, because no one has yet been able to think of a single thing that will take its place.

Prepare Teachers for Their Important Work

Courses in rural education are provided in more than two-thirds of the state normal schools and teachers colleges in the United States, and in a number of colleges and universities. To assist in meeting the need for trained teachers in rural schools, normal training courses are given in selected high schools in some states. These courses, however, are apparently temporary expedients, and according to Rural School Circular No. 13 of the Interior department, bureau of education, there has been a decrease since 1922 in the number of schools offering this work. In 5 of the 28 states where normal courses were formerly available they have been discontinued, and in only 21 high schools or fewer in each of 6 states may such courses be obtained. Standards gradually are being raised in schools that continue the work, and in five states—Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Ohio, and Vermont—the course is maintained on a high school postgraduate basis.

Keep Up Property Value

The average rate per year which must be charged off for depreciation of house property has been found to be 1 1/2 per cent for frame and 1 1/4 per cent for brick. It was brought out by many of the authorities consulted, however, that this difference is almost entirely eliminated if proper care is taken of the home. A stitch in time saves many, and minor repairs here and there will often prevent extensive deterioration of the structure which would occur if such repairs were neglected. The painting of parts exposed to the weather and the prompt renewal of decaying sections are important factors in the longevity of the house. In other words, keep its face clean and its heart in good condition.

Use of Winter Months

Very often some civic body or other organization, with a great deal of community spirit, will be the start of a home beautiful campaign, or a committee of individuals from a given street or section will start the ball rolling.

In beginning such a campaign, it is a wise plan to start the work during the winter, that people might have a chance to think and talk over the plans of the coming campaign, and the committee has plenty of time to get their well-arranged plans in proper shape. The plan will then have time to reap the benefits of the news feature of the local papers, and by word-of-mouth advertising.

Keep Tree Wounds Clean

When filling a tree wound with cement, take care not to pour over decaying wood.

Clean out all signs of rotting. Insects in various stages spend their winters in the spongy section. Scrape it clean down to the growing tissue, called the cambium.

Paint it with shellac, and then with a coat of one-third creosote and two-thirds coal tar. Recoat it with tar if the first one cracks. Pure white lead or linseed oil also will serve.

Then fill the cavity with cement. The nicest care should be exercised in cleaning the wound. Use sharp tools.

Benefit in Ownership

A family that owns a home built exactly as they want it, with the utmost in convenience and comfort, takes pride in it, maintains it better, gets more pleasure out of it and has a more wholesome, healthful and happy atmosphere in which to bring up children.

POINT LOMA DEFEATS

OCEANSIDE ELEVEN

After being on the low end of a six to nothing score in the first half, the Point Loma High School football team, under the direction of Coach Foote, swung into action in the second half to roll up a score of twelve points and defeat the heavy Oceanside eleven twelve to six. Although the Pointers are a green team with the exception of O'Mara, Markel, Justice, and Harrison, last year's lettermen, they showed real fighting spirit and again and again drove through the Oceanside line for yardage. O'Mara, Doehman, Harrison and P. Driscoll were the outstanding players for the Pointers. Time after time O'Mara drove through the line for huge gains and with the aid of Doehman, Harrison and Clark, the backfield were able to show up well.
The next game for the locals will be with Coach Herb. Hoskin's Sweetwater eleven this week-end.

POINT LOMA TRIP SET FOR MUSEUM

The first all-day excursion of the Natural History Museum in its new fall program will be conducted this Saturday, when a party of nature lovers will explore the wild plants and cultivated gardens of Point Loma. Guy L. Fleming, custodian of Torrey Pines Park, will lead the party and lecture on points of interest.

BALBOA THEATRE

Adapted from Brook Harlan's story, "Delfinesen," the new photoplay "I Must Be Loyal," starring Gilbert Moore, is opening today for a one week showing at the Balboa Theatre.

In this pleasing late ride of New York City, Colleen has one of the best parts of her career. She plays the role of Fernie Schmitt, the daughter of a German, who runs a delicatessen store in the big city's cheaper side.
On the Balboa stage for the coming show is one of Fanchon and Mar-co's best acts, "Bluebeard's 8th Wife."
This presentation is a colorful, dramatic farce of the story of Bluebeard, and the 8th wife, who finds the much famed mysterious door.

Rene Riano, perhaps the most popular of all Fanchon and Marco stars, is in the leading role, "Blue-beard's 8th Wife." The little lady was formerly a star in the Music Box Review. She is known throughout theatrical land as the "girl with the bella rubber legs." Her dancing alone, without the help of a plotted story, is a high class show.
Playing with her is Frank Stever, her terrible husband Bluebeard. Stev-er, too, represents the best vaudeville.
Besides, he is an accomplished singer.
In this act, he is featured in the song
"Araby," a popular hit that was dedicated to Valentino.

CABRILLO THEATRE

In the back of a puppet theater in New York City, a knife was sticking in the wall. Before it stood a big handsome Italian, the owner of the theatre, and around him a group of his associates. The Italian was leaving to fight for his country, and he told those around him that if the knife stayed in the wall, he would come back, and when he got back, there should be sudden revenge if any one should trifle with his wife while he was gone.

The big Italian is Milton Sills, back again on the screen to thrill audiences with his masterpiece "Puppets." The story is of his love for little Angela, a girl of Italy, whom he has married and with whom his life is all happiness.

Word comes back from the war, however, that he is dead. Without losing time, Bruno, one of the workers in the theatre, declares his love for Angela, and urges her to marry him but Nicki, the husband comes back. Though he is stone deaf, as a result of shell shock, he senses that something is wrong. When one of the other theatre men tries to explain, a fight ensues.

Opposing The Water and Power Act

THE LOS ANGELES EXAMINER

(a former advocate of the proposed measure) comments:

The $500,000,000 Water and Power Act, defeated in 1922 and 1921, is again before the voters of California. Its revival after this brief lapse of time is not justified. Since the last decision on the issue nothing has been done of consequence to change public sentiment. There are no fresh facts or arguments to capture the imagination and votes of the electorate. There is no public demand for the water and power program described in No. 18. Its submission is untimely.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

comments editorially as follows:

The proposed act provides for the appointment by the Governor of a board of five members vested with authority to issue $500,000,000 in bonds for the purchase of water and power projects. These bonds would be a mortgage on everything in California. If this commission ran short of expense money or its investments did not pay, it could issue some more bonds the amount not being specified. This means that the sky would be the limit as long as investors could be found to buy the bonds.

TWINS ARRIVE TO DELIGHT PERSALL FAMILY

On their recent return from a most enjoyable trip of a fortnight or so up the coast, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Persall, of 2221 Abbott street, were greeted with the delightful tidings that they were grandparents—not once, but twice all at once. The joyful event happened on Tuesday, Oct. 5, when twins were born to Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Persall, of Normal Heights, San Diego. The pair of newly-arrived native Californians weighed nearly six pounds apiece, and both are hearty and healthy specimens of the masculine gender. They have been named Billy and Bobby and the entire Persall family circle is in the seventh heaven of happiness. "Grandad" Persall is a well known beach realty broker and was recently elected secretary-treasurer of the O. B. Chamber of Commerce. He jubilantly passed around chocolates for the ladies and cigars for the men at the Board of Directors meeting last Tuesday night. Mr. and Mrs. Persall were accompanied on their northern tour by Mr. Weitzel, a guest at the Loma Apartment Hotel on Abbott street.

SCHOOL DAYS

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE
BY JOSEPH KAYE

At 21: H. Gordon Selfridge Went to Work for Marshall Field at $10 a Week.

"WHEN I was twenty-one I went to Mr. Marshall Field in Chicago with a letter of introduction from L. H. Field, a cousin of the great merchant. My interview took about three minutes and I think I shivered most of the time, for Mr. Field was then the merchant of merchants. He was very cold and formal in his manner. He read my letter, glanced at me, and said:

"I will start you at $10 a week in the basement."

"Then he rang the bell and turned me over to an assistant, who showed me about the store."

"I went back to Jackson, where I lived, and talked the situation over with my mother, for on the very day I left to see Mr. Field, one of our friends, who kept a creamery, had offered me $1,200 a year as a book-keeper."

"Twelve hundred dollars in a country town was a fortune, so it was a hard choice for me to make. I inclined toward the twelve hundred because that meant I could support my mother in comfort. But she would hear of nothing of the kind and urged me to go to Chicago. Acting on her advice I took my place in Mr. Field's basement, without any definite duties—just a boy at $10 a week—H. Gordon Selfridge."

TODAY—H. Gordon Selfridge has the most famous department store in England, doing both a retail and wholesale business. The Selfridge store in London is the mecca of all visitors and shoppers.

Before Mr. Selfridge was thirty he was made manager of the retail branch of Marshall Field & Co., and at the age of forty he was wealthy enough to retire from business.

The idle life, however, did not suit him, as it doesn't so many other American business men who retire, and he went back to commerce. After engaging for a short time in business in this country he went to London and made shopping history there.

"The trouble with modesty," says the quizzing Sue, "is it depends too much on the quality of the stockings."

Baby Buggy Vanishing

A sign of changing conditions. Is seen in the passing of the baby buggy.

Manufacturers of this once popular vehicle report a steady falling off of business during the past few years.

The reason is not so much that fewer babies are being born as that now the whole family is taken out for an airing.

The babies get their fresh air riding in automobiles along country roads instead of being wheeled on city sidewalks.

A PINCH OF THIS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHEN Mother used to mix a dough or make a batter, long ago When I was only a little boy, I used to like just standing by and watching her, for all the while she'd sing a little, maybe smile, and talk to me and tell me what—Well, things I never have forgot.

I'd ask her how to make a cake. "Well, first," she'd say, "some sugar, some butter, and an egg or two. And then put in, to make it good," (This part I never understood. And often used to wonder at). "A pinch of this, a pinch of that."

And then she'd say, "My little son, when you grow up, when childhood's done, And Mother, maybe, far away, Then just remember what I say: For life's a whole lot like a cake, Yes, life's a thing you have to make. Much like a cake, or pie, or bread, You'll find, my son," my Mother said.

I did not understand her then, But now her words come back again. Before my eyes the past appears, A life of laughter and of tears, And both the bitter and the sweet Have made that life of mine complete. The things I have, the things I miss—A pinch of that, a pinch of this.

At first I thought of flour alone, I'd make my life, that wealth I'd own And never care about the rest, But things I lost that I possessed, And things possessed, when life grew sad.

I never knew before I had: In sorrow something would occur Like—well, like memories of her.

And now I think I know the way To make a life. As she would say, Put in the wealth to serve your needs, But don't leave out the lovely deeds, Put in great things you mean to do, But don't leave out the good, the true, Put in, whatever you are at, A pinch of this, a pinch of that.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE FLIGHT OF A CROW

IF YOU see a solitary crow in flight it is a sign that you will soon take a journey. The length of the journey will be long or short according to the length of the crow's flight. This superstition is found in many parts of the country and is merely a survival "auspicious" to coin a word, or "auspicious" to use the Latin noun, the science of divination by the flight of birds so popular among the old Romans.

It is a crude, layman's sort of "auspicious"; the Romans erected the art into a complicated mystery which had its beginnings, probably, in just such a simple and obvious matter as this: the science of divination by the flight of birds so popular among the old Romans. THE MOMENT'S JUDGMENT

By ALFRED DENNISON

(By W. G. Chapman.)

THIS is the story they tell in clubs in the Far East concerning Mannerling. It is not told to any but members of the government service, and these do not tell it too much, for it is one of those stories that are better suppressed.

The marvelous loyalty of India to Great Britain was the most significant thing in the whole of the great war. In one quarter only was there dissatisfaction. That was the little state of Bundapur, in central India. Bundapur was the birthplace of the ferocious worship of the goddess Kali, the murder-goddess. For centuries this fierce idolatry had been decaying, but of late years there had been an effort to revive it.

Now Bundapur had strong links of contact with other idolatrous states of India. If the rajah of Bundapur took advantage of England's need to throw off her yoke, he would be joined by other potentates, and the flame of revolt would spread all through the central provinces.

It was Mannerling's task to preserve peace in Bundapur. He was the British resident there, and the power behind the throne. There were two other rulers in the turbulent little state—the Rajah Ferozshah, whose ancestors had been Moslems and had become idolaters in order to retain their hold upon the kingdom, and Muzzur, the chief priest, who officiated in the magnificent temple of the goddess, to which votaries came from all parts of India.

Mannerling and old Muzzur were good friends, for the British government scrupulously respects all faiths in its dominions, but when opportunity comes, friendship goes. And opportunity had come with the war to the old king Ferozshah, who dreamed of carving out for himself an empire which was to embrace all central India.

Mannerling was engaged to an English girl, who was to have come out to marry him when the war began. That postponed matters, and Mannerling, chafing under the delay, could only continue to administer the affairs of the kingdom, as the representative of the British raj. He had not a single white soldier to maintain his authority, for they had all been withdrawn. Meanwhile, the annual festival of the goddess Kali was approaching.

Mannerling had a shrewd idea of what was brewing in Bundapur. He had, in fact, had a frank talk with old Muzzur. He had shown him what was no use showing the old king, because the priest's word alone could decide the issue. He had explained to him that England's might, temporarily withdrawn, would fall after the war with fearful force upon a rebellious Bundapur. Let Muzzur declare for England and rich would be his reward.

The old priest smoked and listened, and, while Mannerling was wondering at his silence, a shower of stones came through the windows of the residence, thrown by the turbulent, fanatical mob without. The priest rose, smiling. "You see," he said, "the decision is not in my power, sahib. The people are very much attached to the faith of Kali, and they want to be free. Only one thing can keep them loyal."

"What is that?" asked Mannerling. The priest leaned forward, confidentially. "If the sahib will also accept the faith of Kali, the people will hear his words," he said.

When he was gone, and the few native servants had dispersed, the mob, Mannerling paced his room, thinking. He was a sincerely religious man; he believed that to become an idolater would have certain spiritual consequences; he knew that it meant the loss of Macy Trevethan, whom he had loved since he was a boy. But, if a man should sacrifice his life for his country, how much the more should he not sacrifice his soul for her, and the woman he loved?

The struggle lasted all night. At dawn he sent for the priest, Muzzur, entering, found a haggard man with drawn cheeks and hair streaked with gray. Mannerling had aged twenty years in that one night.

"Muzzur," said Mannerling, "prepare a proclamation for the people stating that I have decided to accept the faith of Kali, and that I shall attend at the temple tomorrow, when the annual festival begins, to prostrate myself before the goddess."

The old priest watched him with a serene face. He knew the struggle that Mannerling had gone through; he knew, too, that the rajah would not be overpleased at this dramatic ending of all his plans for carving out an idolatrous empire in the heart of India.

"It shall be done as the sahib says," he answered at last, and withdrew. The news buzzed through Bundapur. Within two hours all the inhabitants of the state knew that the goddess Kali, of the many hands, had conquered. A huge mob gathered outside the residence and cheered itself hoarse. But inside Mannerling was pacing up and down, and he paced all night, and none dared disturb him.

At dawn he called the bearers of his palanquin, and, stepping inside, he allowed himself to be borne through the enthusiastic mobs that lined the streets toward Kali's temple. Bundapur was in a fever. The opening of the great annual festival was the occasion for frenzies of fanatical delight, and the approaching conversion of Mannerling was the cause of the wildest excitement. Through the streets rushed fanatics, slashing themselves with knives. The golden image of the goddess was borne back from the procession to the accompaniment of a band of temple women, who danced and leaped above the bodies of the prostrate devotees.

Mannerling, lying in his palanquin, was aware of all this. He knew that no punishment could expiate his offense. He was giving his country that which was infinitely dearer than life. His love, his soul, his honor—he stared at the photograph which he was holding. It represented Mary Trevethan as she had appeared when he was home four years before. He would never see her again, but somehow he felt that, at this crisis where dishonor and honor met, her spirit stood beside him.

The palanquin stopped. The curtains were drawn back. Mannerling stepped out and entered the grotesque temple, walking on a path strewn with flowers. Inside he heard the throbbing of flutes and the sighs of a vast multitude of worshippers. Then he was before the altar, beside old Muzzur, who held the sacrificial knife, and starting into his eyes were the cruel eyes of Kali, the stone image with the many hands, each dripping with human blood.

Upon his golden throne loomed the old rajah. He was calculating what step he should take when Mannerling had accepted Kali. It upset the plans that he had built; yet he was shrewd enough to have others in view. With Mannerling's aid he could yet carve out his empire.

Mannerling, standing beside the priest, let his eyes roam over the huge interior of the temple. He saw the decorated walls, the breathless crowds, completely silent, waiting for the moment when he would fall before Kali's statue, to be anointed with the blood of the dreadful sacrifice, the drawn curtains behind which the rajah's wives were gazing curiously on him.

And at the last moment, while the ten-toms indicated that the goddess was awaiting the sacrifice, a new thought took possession of Mannerling. He could not carry out his plan. Generations of Puritan ancestors rose up within him, clamoring and crying that he, a Christian, could never yield to Kali.

He perceived the hideous pit into which he had so nearly fallen. The world would ascribe his complaisance to fear; it would be said that an Englishman had accepted Kali to save his life. Was not the empire built upon faith and loyalty, and the courage of her servants? How could he serve it better than by remaining true to his faith, whatever happened?

It was the moment of judgment, when, unless he saw his duty clear as a razor edge before him, inevitable ills must follow. Mannerling saw it.

The blood of the sacrifice was drenching Kali's altar. Muzzur turned toward Mannerling, motioning to him to prostrate himself. Mannerling waved him away and called to the crowd.

"I have come here today," he said, "to testify to the truth. Since England became your lord, when has she sought to change your faith or customs? Nevertheless, I am here to tell you now that your faith in Kali is the faith of the sandpiper that walks among the marshes before the sand has set."

He heard a rustle, a sigh, and suddenly the whole body of worshippers was upon its feet in terror of the sacrifice that was being accomplished.

For, snatching from the priest's hand the hammer with which the victim had been slaughtered, Mannerling brought it down upon the head of the abominable idol. And Kali, the many-handed goddess, fell from her pedestal and rolled, a hideous thing, along the temple floor.

Then, lying down the hammer, Mannerling awaited death. But since none dared lay hands on him, he went out into the street. He walked to the residence and waited. Twenty minutes later he heard the mob coming pouring down the bazaar and toward the veranda on which he awaited them alone.

He stood there with folded arms, patiently, ready for the vengeance of the fanatical multitude. But, when they reached him, he found himself standing above a prostrate crowd of worshippers. For even black-skinned people grope upward toward the higher, and by his act the worship of the murder goddess had been swept away forever.

Improved Megaphone

Prof. F. R. Watson, authority on acoustics at the University of Illinois, has developed a megaphone which distributes the sound over greater areas than the type used heretofore. The "loud speaker," which is made of tin, is 18 inches long and has only a narrow rectangular opening. Its construction is based on the sound fraction theory, which holds that sound passing through a narrow aperture spreads out over a wide area.

Writes Ethel May Snider Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Hartford City, Ind.—Doing housework and taking care of a sick woman proved to be too much for Ethel May Snider, R. R. 1 of Hartford City, until she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Overwork had so undermined her health that she had to give up all outside work, and when she saw this medicine advertised in the "Star" and other papers, she went to drugist and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She took it regularly, was greatly benefited and now feels very much better.

Ethel May Snider's experience is similar to that of thousands of other women in all walks of life, who have sent testimonials to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass.

Among those who praise the Compound are young girls who have been enabled to attend school regularly—working girls who have gained strength and endurance so necessary to them, housewives and mothers who have found that the tonic effect of the Compound has enabled them to perform their daily tasks more easily.

Wave Traps That Will Be of Interest to Fans.

Many radio fans complain of their sets lacking selectivity. The sets have not the power to separate stations sufficiently and their operators are at a loss to know what to do. A wave trap is the only solution if one does not want to pull his set apart again, so here is some data that will be of interest to fans troubled in that respect.

Wave traps and blocking devices are becoming more and more essential to operators of none too selective receivers, especially in congested districts where not only does one have to contend with 25 or more stations separated by the smallest possible margin, but with annoying proximity to many which are broadcasting on high power.

The better-designed receivers are not affected but a great many of the sets built in the days before so many stations were on the air, as well as many of the less selective creations of more recent months, find it expedient to use auxiliary apparatus in the form of wave traps.

Here is a commercial trap and others just as effective that can be constructed very cheaply by the listener who finds need for one in reducing to a minimum the interference of stations operating on waves too near the same for the unselective receiver to separate. It is sometimes necessary to use more than one trap to bring to an unobjectionable point the interfering stations. This is especially true where high power is the source of annoyance.

Series and Shunt Traps.

The simplest form of traps which are effective are series and shunt traps as well as a few variations of absorption and rejection traps.

The circuit is that given in Fig. 1 and consists of two 13 plate variable condensers, one of which is connected in series with an inductance of .05 turns of No. 26 single cotton-covered copper wire, wound on a 2 1/2 inch cardboard tube. This is the left-hand dial in the commercial unit and tunes the reflector circuit. The other condenser, adjusted by the right-hand dial, is shunted across a coil of similar dimensions, .65 turns, over which is wound a primary of 21 turns of No. 24 gauge wire, and forms the absorption side of the circuit.

The theory of operation of this circuit is very simple. The undesirable station is tuned to maximum intensity on the receiver. The reflector or left dial is then turned until the signal is reduced to the lowest audibility possible. The absorption trap is then adjusted until all perceptible reception of the undesirable station is absolutely eliminated or reduced to negligibility. The receiver proper can then be tuned to any other station that is wanted without further interference from the heretofore offending station. Where more than one station causes trouble it would be well for the operator to log the interfering stations and the proper dial settings for their elimination so as to facilitate the proper tuning of the receiver. This trap, as well as the other traps to be described, necessitates no change of wiring in the sets to which they are attached, further than connecting the antenna and ground to the proper binding posts on the trap and connecting the output of the trap or traps to the ground and aerial posts of the receiver.

Connected in Series.

Fig. 2 shows a simple trap that may be connected in series with the antenna or ground as shown. It can be made with 60 turns of No. 24 D.C.C. wire on a 2 1/2 inch cardboard tubing tapped at the 5th, 10th, 18th and 30th turns and shunted by a .005 mfd. variable condenser.

Fig. 3 is a diagram of a trap in shunt that can be made by winding a coil of the same dimensions and values as that in Fig. 2, leaving out the tapping arrangement and shunting it with a variable condenser of .0005 mfd. capacity. In addition a fixed condenser of .0001 mfd. capacity is inserted in the connection that goes to the antenna binding post of the set as shown in the diagram.

Fig. 4 gives another arrangement of a shunt trap that consists of an inductance coil of No. 34 D.C.C. wire wound on a tube 2 1/2 inches in diameter until there is a coil of wire 4 1/2 inches long in series with this a variable condenser should be connected with a maximum capacity not exceeding .0002 mfd.

Fig. 5 shows an absorption trap that can be made by winding on a tube 2 1/2 inches in diameter, 65 turns of No. 24 D.C.C. copper wire shunted with a .0002 or a .0025 mfd. variable condenser. On top of this and in the center of the larger winding a 21-turn primary should be wound of approximately the same gauge wire. This may also be connected in series with the antenna.

Fig. 6 is a combination of the shunt and series traps, the specifications of which are Figs. 2 and 3.

In all cases the traps specified are for sets working on regular overhead inverted L or T type antennas and ground connections. It may be found that a single trap of any of the types given will give the desired results, but a combination of two traps will be found essential where the interference is very strong.

Radio Set Must Not

Be Roughly Handled

Although a receiving set is constructed with the greatest care and strongest materials obtainable, it will not withstand hard usage. Many operators will twist the dials, poke into the works and jab in the phone or loud speaker plugs with unthinking violence and then wonder why their set does not remain perfect forever. A radio set will stand up under a great deal of abuse, but eventually, if continuously subjected to harsh treatment, something will give way, or loosen, and effectiveness will be reduced. The delicate wiring adjustments and connections must be regarded with the same care that a person would exercise toward the timing gears, explometer, adjustment, or valves of a car. The best engine in the world will go bad under abusive usage—and so will the best radio set.

Care in Handling Wires

When Assembling Set

When assembling a receiving set, wires which connect to the plate of the tube should be kept away from all other wires. Wires connecting with the grid should be kept away from the front of the panel and from points that connect with the ground, otherwise when the hand approaches dial a capacity effect will be introduced that will cause howls. Wires should run at right angles wherever possible and especially the plate and grid wires, if it is necessary for them to cross each other. Rigid wire should be used because flexible wire is likely to sag or swing a little if the set is jarred and tuning will be disturbed. The wire does not have to be covered with insulation. All joints must be clean, firm and soldered.

Have Iron Well Cleaned to Do Neat Soldering

A requisite to neat soldering is to first have the iron thoroughly cleaned, making sure that the connections to be soldered are also clean. Rub them slightly with a file or sandpaper to brighten the surfaces. The next step is tinning the iron. When the iron is hot, plunge into flux and apply solder to the tip, and afterwards rub with a damp cloth. When ready to solder, apply the flux very sparingly. Poor connections are caused by the use of excessive quantities. When using solder having a flux core, it is unnecessary to apply any flux in advance of soldering.

Things Worth Knowing

About the Condenser

A condenser in a receiving set is designed to have a large capacity in a small space. It consists essentially of metal plates which are insulated from each other by a dielectric or insulating material. It is used in a radio-frequency circuit to tune an inductance coil to a certain wave length, and is known in this connection as a variable condenser. It is used also to stop the flow of direct current and pass alternating current, and in this connection its capacity is fixed, and it is known as a by-pass condenser.

NECKPIECE HELPS OUT HAT; WINSOME CAPES FOR FALL

NOW is woman's joy supreme, for the ostrich boa is reappearing in all its glory on the stage of fashion. This autumn and winter will test that prevailing sentiment among the fair sex that nothing quite so completes the picture as a fluffy neckpiece of one sort or another. Especially are milliners everywhere encouraging the consciousness among their clientele that a becoming hat takes on greater becomingness if complemented with a "scrumptious" feather boa or a cunningly devised arrangement of fur, preferably monkey, other black or white. In short, ostrich boas and

The pink-beige hat last shown tops a feather novelty boa, the like of which is very fashionably present with new millinery.

A cape, a cape, my kingdom for a cape. Not in precisely these words, perhaps, do the French women of fashion say it, but they suit the action to the word by ordering from their couturiers a modest cape for the autumn season to come. Just how successfully these orders are being executed by Paris stylists is told in the accompanying picture.

That shirring be used in the development of the cape to the right is to fauciful fur collars have become the vogue—a word to the wise be sufficient.

The effectiveness of a handsome ostrich boa is set forth in this picture in several instances. Note the luxuriant black feather boa as worn with the stunning velvet beret, a French creation, shown to the left in this group. By the way, Paris says for the crowns of our hats, higher and then higher until they reach the limit, and in this smart velvet shape we see the theory delightfully put into practice.

Very pleasantly is the vogue for black and white stressed in the stylish black moire chaplet to the right with its inevitable accompaniment of be expected, because shirring has become the all-absorbing pastime of the fashionist. It enters into the making of our raiment at the slightest opportunity. Where once we tucked and plaited we shirr these days. This item in regard to shirring is one to hold in mind when planning one's autumn apparel. As to this particular cape in question it has the word "Parisian" stamped in every detail. It is made of heaviest canton crepe, and one of its outstanding style-points is the fact that it is collared with a contrasting color. A conclusive argument in favor of its usefulness, is the fact that it is reversible.

Ultrasmoothness is written in every phase of the costume shown to the

That most fetching millinery creation which tops this group is content to have as its "first aid" to becomingness a girlish high collar of gray squirrel, thus challenging ostrich with fur.

Again fur competes with feather in the collarlette of black monkey, worn with the large black velvet chapeau shown below to the left. 'Tis said in millinery circles that the call for large black velvet hats is insistent.

In speaking of hats, velvet ones are ultra-smart, especially shirred velvet as shown in the nasturtium with cinnamon-colored model to the right.

This is a cape which invokes an urge to possess. Not only does a scarf collar give it extreme chic, but the fact that it is topped with a swaggy vagabond velours hat gives it even greater prestige as strikingly bespeaking smartest mode. Just a word about the modish cloth coat dress over which it is posed. Street frocks of this strictly tailored genre express no mistakable up-to-date.

Half a moment's thought will suffice anyone to realize that if this practice is continued it will be only a very short time until the incinerators will become unwieldy barrels of empty cans and trash and will not serve in the least the purpose for which they are intended, namely the burning of INFLAMMABLE TRASH ONLY. NO PLACE LIKE M. B.

Mr. A. Jewell who with some friends started August 1st on a trans-continental driving trip has just returned with interesting accounts of their wonderful experiences. They started northward touring northern California through Utah, Nevada, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana where he visited kinfolks. Expected to tour through to Florida and the eastern states but changed their plans on account of the storms. Like all the others who tour the country, Mr. Jewell saw no place he likes so well as right here.

DOUBLE BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Davis of McFarland, Calif., have been the guests for the past week of Mrs. Davis' sister, Mrs. Rosamond L. Walters, of 815 Kingstown Court, during which time the two sisters celebrated their birthdays together. Mr. and Mrs. Davis left last Friday for McFarland, where they are owners of the Shady Camp Auto Park and Service Station.

"Make It Unanimous"

The SLOGAN adopted for the Sutherland-San Vicente bond campaign simply implies that here San Diego finds a question which hasn't any two sides. That is true. The Sutherland-San Vicente issue is no issue at all, in the ordinary sense, because it is entirely one-sided. The "question" is simply this: Water, or no water?

The development at Sutherland and San Vicente not only means rapid water development and adequate supply, but it is the only possible source of water supply now available to the city. Sutherland and San Vicente not only are exceptionally fine dam-sites, but are the only ones which San Diego has any prospect of using for some time to come.

When the people of San Diego, having experienced a tremendous growth of their city's population, and having every reason to believe that this growth is quickening all the while, are asked whether they want water or don't want it—there is only one answer. The question doesn't put any great strain on anybody's judgment.

In the long run, San Diego will need both the Sutherland-San Vicente system and El Capitan; and, of course, the original plan was to develop El Capitan first and hold the former sites in reserve. The present litigation over El Capitan has not eliminated this plan, but has simply made it necessary to reverse the order in which the projects are to be undertaken. We shall still have—and shall need—both an immediate new source and an ample reserve for future development. We cannot afford to abandon either feature of the plan.

Remember,

This $2,000,000 builds two reservoirs and 17 miles of pipe line to bring the water to San Diego by gravity. That this work will be given to the lowest responsible bidder, and that in all probability, the increase in value of assessable property during the next year will be sufficient to pay the interest and sinking funds of these bonds. Therefore, there should be no increase in City tax rate.
